

Excerpt from In Memory of Rufus W. Peckham: A Judge of the Court of Appeals, Who Perished on the Wreck of the Steamer Ville Du Havre, on the Voyage From New York to Havre, November 22d, 1873 The beautiful thought was expressed, by a distinguished writer, that the great steam ships which are constantly crossing and recrossing the Atlantic, are like the weavers shuttle forming the web which unites in closer relations the people of continental Europe and the British islands, with those of America. And thus it is, that when the thread is violently broken, a shock is felt on both sides of the ocean. When the Ville du Havre went down burying with her, in the midst of the sea, her precious human freight, the shock was intensified because of the belief of many that the loss was not unavoidable. Among her passengers lost, was one who in his high judicial position and by his manly character had endeared himself to many friends, and whose heroic death produced a profound sensation throughout the country. It is, therefore, fitting that the record of the honors paid to his memory should be preceded by a brief sketch of his life.
